Nearly 1,000 students from seven middle and high schools in Fresno Unified will present civic service projects as part of the Democracy Program Showcase. Topics for projects can range from bullying to mental illness to air pollution. The showcase is presented by the Civic Education Center, which supports schools’ efforts to sustain American democracy by teaching students the values, skills and knowledge of U.S. citizenship. For the showcase, students create solutions for real problems, preparing them to meet the challenges of the 21st Century. Students from Clovis, Fowler and Sanger districts will also participate.

“When students work together to come up with creative solutions to real challenges in our community, they learn about their responsibilities as citizens and the skills they will need to be contributing members of their community,” said Superintendent Bob Nelson.
