The district is offering line dance therapy for families in the Hoover High School region at a special “Hope and Healing” event. Students and their families are invited for a fun evening making connections and finding out more about the social-emotional support resources Fresno Unified provides.

Hoover line dancing is part of a series of family engagement events being held in the high school regions in support of the district’s board-adopted Family Goal to “Increase inclusive opportunities for families to engage in their students’ education.”

Event partners include Parent University, Fresno Unified board trustee Claudia Cazares and the Department of Prevention and Intervention.
“I invite our families to come out for line dancing at Hoover High and learn how our emotional well-being is connected to everything we do, and how our district has ways to help,” said Superintendent Bob Nelson.
